This is Renegade Files Episode 94, the Fan Theories Episode.

This episode is made up of the Favorite Conspiracy Theories sent in to the podcast by fans like you over the month of September. Thank you so much to you if you sent in your favorite crazy, fun, or interesting theory. On this episode I'll discuss the coolest ones we got and I can't wait to get into them.

Just some notes about the show, I'm only going to mention people's first names or social media handles to keep up privacy for the listeners. And Also, this is a relaxed episode, so forgive a few mistakes or repeats along the way.

This is geared to be fun for both you and I so enjoy.

Before we dive into the theories, here are some easy ways you can help Renegade Files if you like and appreciate what I do here.

First and easiest: Click Follow for this show wherever you listen, like Spotify or Apple Podcasts.

Then Kick us a 5-star review there, if you think we deserve it.

Also, Visit and Share our Website at TheRenegadeFiles.com. Everything Else I'll mention in the next few seconds can be found through links at the website, so that's your one stop Renegade Files shop, and it's the easiest single link to share the show with your friends... that's TheRenegadeFiles.com.

From there you can help Crowdfund the show and get bonus episodes and more at patreon.com/renegadefiles, and thank you if you're an RFA Agent in the Renegade Files Agency on Patreon already, you make all this possible.

Part 1 – The Jackie Gleason / Richard Nixon UFO Story

This story was sent in by Jennifer who is not only a great fan of the show, but a Renegade Files Agent on Patreon as well, so thank you so much.

The funny thing is I had this on my list for a full episode, but this format works perfectly for the info here, and I also get to include it in the Fan Theories episode, so great minds think alike.

The story goes that President Richard Nixon personally showed comedian and actor Jackie Gleason the remains of crashed extraterrestrial craft, and possibly alien bodies, at Homestead Air Force Base in Florida during the early 1970s.

The date most often cited by UFO researchers is February 19, 1973, during Nixon's presidency. Gleason, a lifelong UFO enthusiast, allegedly told close friends that the President himself drove to Gleason's home unaccompanied late one night, picked him up, and escorted him onto the base to see extraordinary evidence of extraterrestrial life.

Background: A Friendship and Shared Fascination

Gleason's interest in UFOs was genuine and well-documented. He collected thousands of books on parapsychology, UFOs, and the paranormal, and even built a "UFO-shaped house" in Peekskill, New York (often called the "Mothership" house).

[details about the house]: <https://www.realtor.com/news/celebrity-real-estate/jackie-gleason-spaceship-party-house/>

Richard Nixon and Jackie Gleason reportedly became friendly through their mutual interest in golf and celebrity circles in Florida. Both men often golfed at the Inverrary Country Club near Gleason's home in Lauderhill, Florida. According to later accounts, Nixon was aware of Gleason's obsession with UFOs and allegedly decided to grant him a private glimpse behind the curtain.

The Night of the Alleged Visit (as the legend tells it)

Timeframe: February 1973, while Nixon was visiting Florida and staying at his "Key Biscayne compound." Event: That evening, Nixon reportedly showed up at Gleason's home, alone, without Secret Service, and told the surprised comedian to come along. The President then drove him to Homestead Air Force Base, about an hour's drive away. Once there, they were waved through security without question, and Nixon led Gleason into a secure hangar.

Inside, according to the story, Gleason was shown:

1. A recovered UFO or sections of a craft, described as metallic and strange in structure.
2. Bodies of small humanoid beings, allegedly grayish and emaciated, "child-sized," as later retellings put it.

The scene supposedly left Gleason deeply shaken and silent for days afterward.

The story did not surface publicly until years after Gleason's death in 1987.

It came primarily from Beverly McKittrick, Gleason's ex-wife (they divorced in 1975), who gave interviews recounting what Jackie had told her. Her first known public statement appeared in the National Enquirer in 1983, where she described Gleason coming home pale and upset after a mysterious trip with Nixon, later confiding in her about what he saw.

Afterward, UFO researchers like Timothy Green Beckley, Larry Bryant, and others included the account in UFO literature and interviews, treating it as one of the more colorful celebrity-related "inside" UFO anecdotes.

Over time, various UFO books, radio shows, and documentaries have repeated or expanded the story, sometimes adding minor embellishments, such as claims that Gleason tried to gain further access to the evidence, or that Nixon swore him to secrecy.

Gleason allegedly described the alien bodies as “small, with large heads and grayish skin.” He was said to be emotionally disturbed by what he saw, losing sleep for weeks. His wife remembered him telling her it “looked like they’d been stored in glass cases or freezer drawers.” Some UFO writers claim Nixon made the offer to “prove” to Gleason that UFOs were real after one of their golf conversations on the topic.

The story remains one of the most famous presidential UFO anecdotes, alongside Eisenhower’s alleged 1954 meeting with aliens and Jimmy Carter’s personal UFO sighting. It’s frequently cited in discussions of the idea that U.S. Presidents have “top-secret awareness” of extraterrestrial contact. Gleason’s personal passion for UFOs lends the story a certain internal consistency that keeps it alive in UFO circles.

So what do you think? Did Nixon really show Gleason Aliens and a recovered UFO? It’s possible, but all we really have as evidence are second hand stories from an X-wife writing a book. Definitely a cool story for sure.

Part 2 – The Hollow Moon Theory

This one comes from Tom...

The conspiracy theory that the Earth's moon is an artificial, hollowed-out object placed into its perfect orbit by an advanced extraterrestrial race.

The most cited piece of evidence comes from the Apollo 12 mission in 1969. After intentionally crashing the lunar module's ascent stage onto the moon's surface, seismometers detected that the moon "rang like a bell" for an extended period, in one case for over an hour.

Conspiracy theorists interpret this prolonged vibration as proof of a hollow, bell-like interior, rather than the quick dampening that would occur on a solid body like Earth.

Some other moon anomalies cited to support the Hollow Moon Theory are...

- Uniform Craters: Researchers point to the uniform depth of lunar craters, regardless of the size of the impacting object. The theory suggests this indicates a resilient, metallic shell beneath the lunar surface that prevents deeper penetration.

- Unusual Density: The moon's significantly lower density compared to Earth is presented as evidence that its interior is not solid, but rather contains large, hollow cavities.
- Peculiar Orbit and Size: The moon's near-perfect alignment during a solar eclipse is "too perfect" to be a coincidence, and its disproportionately large size relative to Earth is unique within the solar system.
- Age Inversion: Researchers and scientists tell us that on the moon, older rock is found on top of newer rock in some places on the moon's surface, which is an inversion that is inconsistent with a natural formation.

The debunking science goes like this...

- The "Ringing" Effect: Scientists explain the prolonged seismic reverberations by the dry, anelastic properties of the moon's surface, unlike the moist, dense earth that dampens vibrations more quickly.
- Craters and Density: Seismic measurements have confirmed that the moon has a solid, layered interior with a crust, a dense mantle, and a small, dense core, not a hollow core.
- Formation Theory: The most widely accepted scientific theory suggests the moon was formed from debris ejected after a Mars-sized object collided with a molten, early Earth. This impact would explain both the moon's composition and its current orbit.

So the Hollow Moon Theory is a good one.

There's so much going on with the moon that we could do a few episodes on it, and that's without even touching on the Moon Landing Hoax stuff, which we will get into in the future.

To me the weirdest things are the perfectly circular orbit of the moon and the clockwork precision of the way it rolls around it's own axis at the perfect speed compared to its Earth Orbit to keep one side forever away from us. Mysterious.

Part 3 – The Mimic

The 3rd submission is a paranormal one and it comes to us from Emily. Thank you so much for sending it in.

This is the Idea of the Mimic...and This is creepy.

In paranormal beliefs, a mimic is a "voice doppelganger"... so a spiritual entity that imitates the voices of known people, like family or friends, to interact with you.

These entities are often seen as malevolent, using familiar voices to gain trust or sow confusion and fear. People encountering mimics are advised to not respond to the voices, as reacting to them can "feed" the entity and make it stronger.

What a Mimic is:

A deceptive entity: It's described as a spirit or ghost that copies human voices to deceive its target. The voices it imitates are typically of people you know, such as a spouse, child, or parent, or even your own voice.

I had never really looked into the idea of Mimics, so I wanted to dig into it. Some of my notes come from the website believingthebizarre.com, which is the website for the Believing The Bizarre Podcast. Check them out.

Info at [<https://believingthebizarre.com/mimic-creatures/>]

Another thing that came to my mind as I was looking into this paranormal concept of the Mimic, is the idea that as our society becomes more and more technologically focused, particularly around the ways we communicate, that the phenomenon of the Mimic may also be growing more technological.

For example, have you ever had the experience of clearly and unmistakably hearing the sound of your phone's Text message alert go off, but then when you find your phone and look... no messages. No activity at all.

I have definitely had this happen. And the alerts I use are very specific sounds. It's a weird feeling.

Also a friend of mine told me that he has heard his ring cam notification go off while he's at home, but when he looks, no one is at his door. Ok fine, maybe a dog passing or something, right? but then when he checks his phone, no ring cam notifications there either. He just hears the sound, but no evidence of the camera registering the activity that would make the sound.

I wonder if this is a situation of the old energies of the paranormal mimic, branching out into the realms of technology?

Have you ever experienced a mimic? Technological or otherwise? Let us know in the comments.

Part 4 – Paul is Dead

This crazy conspiracy theory comes to our submission email from Fan of the show, Dante... and it is the theory that Paul McCartney actually died in a car crash in 1966, and was replaced by a look-alike.

Freestyle...

And finally, one of the best...

Part 4 – Meghan Markle Is a Robot

Coming to us from a fan who wishes to remain nameless... the final crazy conspiracy or paranormal idea of this episode ... Meghan Markle Is a Robot.

Freestyle...
